Beaches close until further notice

Base requests consultation on alternative beach management plan

BY CAPT. TOM KNOWLES
30th Space Wing Public Affairs

■ Vandenberg environmental management officials have initiated consultation with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service for an alternative plan for recreational beach access and management during the upcoming Western Snowy Plover nesting season.

The alternative plan calls for recreational access to one-half mile of Surf Beach, one-quarter mile of Wall Beach and one-half mile of Minuteman Beach. All other beach areas would be closed during the nesting season that started yesterday and ends Sept. 30.

"Pending conclusion of the consultation process for the alternative plan, Vandenberg's beaches will be closed to all recreational access until further notice," said Col. Steve Lanning, 30th Space Wing commander.

USF&WS officials rejected a previously submitted plan that called for twice the amount of recreational access, prompting the base to submit the alternative on Monday.

"We'll continue to work with fish and wildlife officials to gain a favorable biological opinion for our preferred option during subsequent nesting seasons," Lanning said.

The base has requirements under the Endangered Species Act to protect the plover habitat and assist the recovery of the species. The plover was listed as a threatened species in 1993.

"Section seven of the Endangered Species Act requires the base to consult with U.S. Fish and Wildlife officials on federal actions that may affect threatened or endangered species," said Lt. Col. Scott Westfall, 30th Civil Engineer Squadron Environmental Flight commander. "Fish and wildlife officials are then required to provide a biological opinion which states the terms and conditions under which the base may conduct the proposed action."

The biological opinion acts as a type of permit authorizing the action to be carried out. The action must minimize any negative or adverse impacts to the species or designated habitat.

COMMANDERS MESSAGE OUTLINES BEACH MANAGEMENT PLAN FOR 2001

■ Col. Steve Lanning, 30th Space Wing commander, will feature a program on cable channel two outlining the 2001 proposed beach management plan and related issues. The program can be viewed every other hour, 24 hours a day starting at 1 a.m.

BREAKERS DINING FACILITY NOT OPEN TO EVERYONE AT VAFB

Q I'm writing to the Action Line about an article on the Breakers Dining Hall reopening published in the Space & Missile Times Feb. 2.

I'm an active-duty officer currently assigned to the 576th Flight Test Squadron. The article stated that the dining facility reopening has improved morale. Toward the end of the article, it lists all people who are eligible to eat in the dining facility.

The list omits active-duty officers assigned to Vandenberg and this disturbs me. I feel that active-duty officers should be allowed to eat a limited number of meals per week in the dining facility.

I feel it is discriminatory not to include active-duty officers when civilians are included in the eligible list. I would like this issue to be addressed. We all serve the same cause and to be denied the opportunity to dine with our troops, and the opportunity to dine in general, at the Breakers Dining Facility needs to be addressed. Thank you.

A As you point out, opening Breaker's Dining Facility is a great quality of life initiative for our airmen. Breakers is an airmen's dining facility subsidized by taxpayer money. It's primarily intended to serve our young airmen living in the dormitories.

In addition, all enlisted members are authorized to use Breakers and military retirees are authorized to dine there. Commanders may eat there several times during the month in order to evaluate the quality of food and service and to hold Commander's Calls. People on temporary duty assignments here, including officers, may eat there provided it states so on their orders.

It's important to stress, however, that the facility is designed for our enlisted members and not the officer corps. If you have questions concerning eligibility, call our Food Service Office at 606-3219.

UPS AND DOWNS OF CDC CHILDCARE WAITING LIST

Q I'm writing to clear up an issue that I have concerning the daycare list here at Vandenberg. I enrolled my son on the list in June 2000. He was No. 4 on the list at the time. As time proceeded, he was moved to No. 2, then back to three, then four, and now is currently standing at No. 6. This is an ongoing problem that I do not understand. Could you please clarify this policy?

A The good news is, your son is now No. 1 on the waiting list at the Child Development Center. Priority for childcare goes first to single parents, either active-duty military or DoD civilians.

The next priority is military members or DoD civilians whose spouses work full time outside the home or are enrolled full time as students with proof of registration. New children with higher priority for childcare will move other children down the waiting list. Children getting childcare or moving out of the area will move other children up the waiting list.

If you have further questions, call the CDC staff at 606-1671.

Without trust, we couldn't succeed

By LT. COL. JOE HOGLER

30th Range Squadron, commander

Trust makes the Air Force work. Here at Vandenberg we carry out a complex, demanding mission at all hours of the day and night. Without trust, we couldn't succeed.

Military professionals demonstrate trust when, acting as warriors of character, they stand up for the right things at the right time and in the right way. You trust your friends and colleagues when you are confident in their skills and by knowing they put doing the right thing above their own interests. The application of our Air Force's core values of Integrity First, Service Before Self, and Excellence in All We Do, builds the trust vital to our fighting edge.

I lead a diverse group of men and women whom I implicitly trust. If I didn't, we couldn't get our mission done, and Team Vandenberg would not enjoy the respect it so justly receives. Whether launching and controlling highly complex and expensive space vehicles to orbit or conducting aeronautical tests over the Pacific Ocean, we trust our skilled operators, maintainers, security forces, analysts, and contractors to make the right calls at the right time. The product of that trust is teamwork.

In fiscal 2000, 30th Range Squadron and ITT operators supported 10 ballistic and 10 spacelift launch operations, with 100 percent mission success. In addition to these launches, together we supported 544 aeronautical operations, ranging from routine overflights of on- and off-shore oil pipelines, to test flights of the F-22 and the of Global Hawk Unmanned Aerial Vehicle

Along with these launches and tests came thousands of associated operations and tests.

Throughout the process of scheduling, planning, and operating the Western Range, we partnered with the professionals from ITT. The teamwork that happens at every level of range operations is what makes it happen.

Gene Kranz, one of NASA's most recognized leaders of the space race days, wrote, "A launch is an existential moment, much like combat. With no time to think about anything, you had to be prepared to respond to any contingency, and those contingencies had to be as fully anticipated as possible before you pushed the button ... There were no guarantees in this new business called spaceflight." Even decades later, there remain no guarantees in spacelift. Kranz went on to list discipline, competence, confidence, responsibility, toughness, and teamwork as the qualities essential for professional excellence. If you boil those down, you end up with Integrity First, Service Before Self, and Excellence in All We Do -- that equals trust.

What Kranz didn't mention though, is what leads up to that "existential moment." The reality is that for every launch, and every other operation on the Western Range, months of plan, scheduling and rehearsing take place. Behind the scenes, there are the countless teleconferences, meetings, and reviews that bring all the threads together on launch night. Dozens of organizations from around the base, around the Air Force, and around the launch community come together—literally hundreds of people working toward the common goal of mission success—as a team.

Without trust, the United States would never have won the wars it has. Without teamwork, the United States never would have placed a man on the moon. Without trust in each other, we at Team Vandenberg cannot accomplish our mission. But, with trust in each other, we produce a great team, accomplish great things, and make Vandenberg a great place to work and live.

GC 2001 Hawks begin prep for competition

By MASTER SGT. TY FOSTER

30th Space Wing Public Affairs

■ In a spirited kick-off rally, the 30th Space Wing began the countdown to Guardian Challenge 2001 by honoring the wing's competitors for this year's event. GC 2001 will run May 7 through 11.

"This is the beginning of a great time for Vandenberg," said Col. Steve Lanning, 30th Space Wing commander, at the Feb. 22 rally. "It just doesn't get any better than this."

During the kickoff, Hawkman, Team Vandenberg's mascot, bounded about the Pacific Coast Club ballroom urging nearly 200 people in the audience to cheer for this year's team.

Sabers in hand, Vandenberg's Honor Guard formed a sword arch as the 19 competitors and 13 trainers were introduced by the kick-off narrator Capt. Christopher Alexander.

"This is the best team we've ever fielded," said Lt. Col. Joe Hogler, Guardian Challenge 2001 project officer. "Given the teams that we put together for the last two years, that is a huge statement!"

Vandenberg has won the Best

Hawkman, Team Vandenberg's mascot, high fives Tech. Sgt. Juan Vasquez, Guardian Challenge 2001 spacelift maintenance team trainer. Vasquez, a facilities maintenance controller at Space Launch Complex-3 East is one of 12 trainers who will put GC 2001 competitors through the paces before the May 7 through 11 event.

Spacelift Operations Team two years running. This is the first year the competition will feature a maintenance event.

The final roster of the 30th Security Forces Squadron GC 2001 team is up in the air for the time being. Currently, eight men are vying for slots on the three-man fire team and for a fire team leader position. Two additional positions will be filled with alternates. The 30th SFS warriors are now honing their shooting skills and tactical maneuvers and pumping up their fitness training.

"These guys are pretty much neck and neck," said Lt. Col. Michael Prucey, 30th SFS commander. "We have guys who are still deployed in Kuwait and Saudi Arabia who want to try out for the team."

Last year, the 90th Space Wing from F.E. Warren AFB, Wyo., narrowly edged Vandenberg's cops out of an obstacle course victory.

"We had a lot of instability last year at this time," Prucey said. High turnover of his people and never ending deployment rotations to Southwest Asia affected the entire unit.

"Through all that, we had a great team last year, but I'm really excited with the composition of the 2001 team," he added. "We have a balance of new folks and some veterans. We're really going to leave the other bases in our dust this year."

Lanning closed the rally by enlisting support for the GC 2001 team.

"This is the last quarter mile in the race," Lanning said. "We need everybody from Team Vandenberg to pull together and bring our team across the finish line."

What is Guardian Challenge?

♦ Guardian Challenge is the "Top Gun" of Space Command. It's a five-day event that enhances space procedures and operations through competition.

♦ Competitors launch simulated Intercontinental Ballistic Missile or a space launch vehicle, "fly" a satellite, operate a space surveillance system or space warning system, navigate challenging obstacle courses, and secure high priority resources.

♦ In July 1993, the Olympic Arena missile competition became Guardian Challenge, reflecting the command motto, "Guardians of the High Frontier." In 1994, the first "Guardian Challenge" competition took place at Vandenberg. This year marks the 33rd anniversary of the competition.

♦ Although the emphasis during Guardian Challenge is clearly on the competition, the most important long-term benefits gained are increased cooperation between space forces and enhanced day-to-day and wartime operations and procedures.

♦ The competition gives Air Force Space Command professionals the opportunity to test their readiness and war fighting capabilities and prove they are the best space team in the world. It's their opportunity to make a strong statement: "We are second to none."

♦ In addition to Vandenberg, there are seven other teams competing in Guardian Challenge this year. They come from Buckley AFB, Colo.; F.E. Warren AFB, Wyo.; Malmstrom AFB, Mont.; Minot AFB, N.D.; Patrick AFB, Fla.; Peterson AFB, and Schriever AFB, Colo.

Youth Softball Recruiting

WE
YOU!

- The Diana Youth Softball League is creating a new division in the league! Possibly coed for maximum participation.
- At least 50 teen-agers, ages 14 to 16, who like to play softball are needed.
- Parents and volunteers are needed to coach divisions.
- Names can be placed on the waiting list at the Youth Center now or call Jose Dean at 734-4531.
- If enough interest is generated, all games will be played on base.
- The cost is $40 and $35 for Youth Center members.

Come out and have some fun!
